

Simmered Pork and Potatoes

A weeknight one-pot simmer: pork, potatoes, carrot and onion cooked down in a sweet-savory broth until the potatoes fall apart at the edges.

Serves 2 · 40 minutes

Original recipe and cooking video by Shojikudo Kitchen (in Japanese).

Shopping list

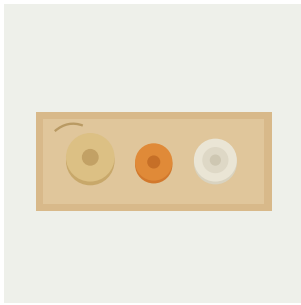

Most of this list is ordinary supermarket shopping. The two exceptions are mirin and dashi granules, which live in the East Asian aisle of a large supermarket or in any Japanese, Korean or Chinese grocery. Both keep for months, so buy them once.

	Ingredient	Amount	If you cannot find it
	Pork shoulder, thinly sliced	200 g (7 oz)	Sold pre-sliced at East Asian groceries as "shabu-shabu" pork. Otherwise ask the butcher to slice it thin, or freeze a piece for 30 minutes and slice it yourself.
	Potatoes	3 medium (about 450 g)	Use a floury variety — Russet or Maris Piper. Waxy potatoes stay firm and will not soak up the broth.
	Carrot	1 large
	Onion	1 medium
	Water	200 ml (about 3/4 cup)
	Soy sauce	2 tbsp (30 ml)	Japanese-style soy sauce. Chinese light soy is saltier — start with 1.5 tbsp and taste.
	Cooking sake	2 tbsp (30 ml)	Dry sherry works. Do not use "cooking sake" that lists added salt without cutting the soy sauce back.
	Mirin	2 tbsp (30 ml)	If you cannot find it, use 2 tbsp water plus 2 tsp sugar and add it with the soy sauce.
	Dashi granules	1/2 tbsp	Instant dashi powder. Substitute 200 ml of light chicken or vegetable stock in place of the water.
	Sugar	2 tbsp	Light brown sugar suits this better than white.
	Neutral oil	1 tbsp

Scan for the original recipe video
<https://recipes.shojikudo.example/r/simmered-pork-and-potatoes>

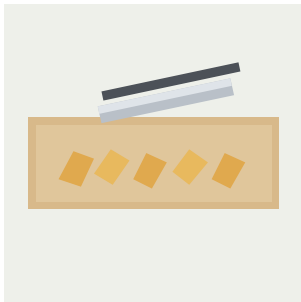

Method

Step 1

Peel the potatoes and cut out any eyes. Peel the carrot and trim off the leafy end. Trim the root end off the onion and peel it.

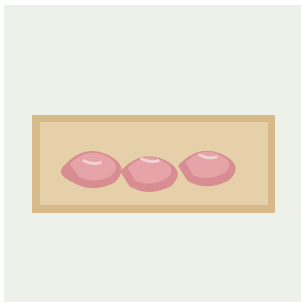

Leaving the root end on the onion until after you cut it keeps the wedges held together in the pot.

Step 2

Cut the potatoes and carrot into rolling wedges. Cut the onion into wedges about 1 cm thick.

A rolling wedge cut: slice diagonally, roll the vegetable a quarter turn toward you, slice again. Every piece ends up with more cut surface than a plain cube, which is how the broth gets inside in only 20 minutes.

Step 3

Cut the sliced pork into bite-sized pieces.

Bite-sized here means one chopstick-load — roughly 4 cm across.

Step 4

Heat the oil in a pot over medium heat and cook the pork until it is no longer pink. Add the onion, carrot and potatoes and cook, stirring, until the surfaces turn translucent.

You are not browning anything here. Stop as soon as the potato edges go glassy — colour would make the broth muddy.

Scan for the original recipe video

<https://recipes.shojikudo.example/r/simmered-pork-and-potatoes>

Step 5

Add the water, soy sauce, sake, mirin, dashi granules and sugar. Bring to a boil and skim off the foam that rises.

The foam is protein from the pork. Skimming it is what keeps the finished broth clear rather than cloudy.

Step 6

Lower the heat, cover the surface with a drop lid and simmer for about 20 minutes, until a skewer goes through the potatoes without resistance.

A drop lid sits directly on the food instead of on the pot rim, so a shallow amount of broth circulates over everything without you stirring and breaking the potatoes. Cut a circle of parchment slightly smaller than the pot and pierce a hole in the middle.

Step 7

Take the pot off the heat and let it stand for 10 minutes before serving.

This rest is where most of the flavour arrives. The broth is drawn back into the potatoes as everything cools, so do not skip it.

Scan for the original recipe video

<https://recipes.shojikudo.example/r/simmered-pork-and-potatoes>